This matter initially began as a Chapter 13 case and then converted to a Chapter 7 proceeding. At the meeting of creditors the Trustee determined that non-exempt equity amounted to $7,500.00 - $12,000.00. The debtor objected to the values despite an analysis from a broker. The Trustee sought to sell the property to which the debtor objected and then eventually agreed to pay $7,500.00. In addition, the debtor had an equity in an automobile at about $1,500.00. At that point, administrative costs were at an amount to allow about a 15% distribution to creditors.

However, some claims were filed that were the subject of objections including the first mortgage holder and creditors whose collateral was not liquidated. These creditors failed or refused to amend or withdraw claims and the Trustee was obligated to object to the claims. Further, the debtor refused to turnover the automobile for sale and an additional amount was required to be expended on such matters.

The result was the elimination of any distribution and an administratively insolvent case.
